Another pitchers' battle was served up to the fans at the park yesterday, and although Hamilton had the best of McKenzie, Portsmouth lost by a 2-1 score. It was a pretty game, full of snap and with lots of features interspersed through the eight and a half innings.

"What has Hamilton got?" was the question that kept the Lawmakers guessing for six straight innings. Then, in the seventh round, Kanzier found out, and in the eighth he told the secret to Titman, who put Siebrle wise. Kanzier's single did not count, but Titman's base hit and Siebrle's three-bagger netted two runs, which made all that was needed.

The Hamilton boy pitched in hard luck, and his mates supported him well, and it looks very much as if Portsmouth is at the bottom of the ladder as the result of the rabbit's foot being against them, for every fan who has seen them play here willingly admits that they have a good team.

Only Three Hits.
Hamilton allowed three hits and struck out six men, while McKenzie granted his opponents four hits and fanned two. A total of seven hits in a game is a pretty good pitchers' fight for any league, from class A to Z.

Three rattling good double plays, besides plenty of star events by individuals, added to the performance. In these doubles, Titman, Sandherr and Russell shone with stellar brilliance. Not a base was stolen during the contest.

In the second inning Riggs swatted a high liner right up to the house in left field, but Russell leaped into the air and caught it.

It looked as if the Truckers would score in the fourth frame, but a double killed their chances. Brodie gave a complimentary, good for one base, being sacrificed to second by Griffin. Gnadinger was hit by a pitched ball. Then Schrader whacked a fly to deep right, which Titman took, and doubled quickly on Gnadinger at second.

In the seventh inning the rosters thought Richmond would score, but another double nipped the chance. Kanzier led off by getting the first hit for his team, and Riggs sacrificed him to second. Then Sandherr ripped a red hot liner just to the left of center field. It looked good, and Kanzier started for third; but in some way

HARVARD BOAT BEATS YALE

With open water between the boats, and Yale fighting on like grim death.

Yale Stroke Faints.

Now came the decisive moment, with the final stretch almost in sight, and the breathless throngs straining to see if Harvard could keep up the pace or would weaken at the close.

Suddenly on they came, when suddenly commotion was observed in the Yale boat, as Griswold, the stroke, fell forward on his oar and ceased to row.

Cass, Yale's coxswain, had already been dashing water into his pale face. For nearly a minute it seemed ten—the Yale stroke sat motionless, bent down as if lifeless. Then he was seen to straighten up and bend to his oar again, and a great shout went up from the Yale cohorts as their crew was seen to pick up the stroke again and rally for another effort.

But they were now six lengths behind, hopelessly beaten. Another twenty strokes, and Griswold was seen to collapse again, and then the whole crew, disheartened at the fall of their leader, quit their work and sat dejected at their oars. Yale was beaten.

It was no longer a race, and Harvard swung ahead alone, still keeping up the racing clip, and crossing the finishing line with regular "wish-swash" to the very end. As Harvard swept across the line, "boom, boom" and "toot, toot" went up in deafening chorus from the myriads of craft, while from bank to bank rolled a chorus of Harvard yells, and from every truck and mainmast broke out the triumphant crimson and a bewildering maze of kaleidoscopic color. In the fore water stood out the big presidential yacht, with the Roosevelt children on the bridge, applauding lustily. Far away could be seen Secretary Taft's car, the big secretary standing bare-headed, gazing back toward the crippled Yale boat, while "Rah, rah, rah, rah, Harvard!" came from the groups of college men as the secretary sped by. Griswold had been helped from the Yale boat, and lagging far behind the Harvard men, the seven remaining Yale men at last made their appearance at the finish, a half mile behind Harvard, receiving a generous ovation for their pluck under such disheartening conditions.

Official Time.

Half mile—Harvard, 2:38; Yale, 2:39.

One mile—Harvard, 5:31; Yale, 5:39.

One and a half miles—Harvard, 8:12; Yale, 8:16.

Two miles—Harvard, 11:33; Yale, 11:37.

Two and one-half miles—Harvard, 14:35; Yale, 14:45.

Three miles—Harvard, 18:00; Yale, 18:10.

Three and one-half miles—Harvard, 21:10; Yale, 21:20.

Four miles—Harvard, 24:10; Yale, 24:20.

There was a wild scene of tumultuous demonstration, and the men of Harvard welcomed the victors and celebrated their triumph. It was twilight as the great din moved homeward from the river banks, turning from the fleet, sparkling with electric lights, to the streets of this old shipping town. Soon the college men began to move to their home fields, the outgoing trains taking crowds to New Haven and Cambridge, Secretary Taft being among those leaving early for New Haven. A little later the Mayflower, with the presidential family aboard, headed toward Oyster Bay, the other yachts and the throngs of visitors scattered, and the Harvard-Yale boat race of 1908 was a memory.

Earlier in the day honors were divided, the Yale four defeating the Harvard four by two lengths, and the Harvard freshmen eight defeating the Yale freshmen by three lengths.

Coxswain Elect Captain.

At the Yale quarters to-night it was found that Griswold, whose home is in Philadelphia, simply suffered a nervous collapse. He was quickly revived, but his grief was pathetic to behold. Captain Ide stood loyally by him, as did every man at the Yale quarters, and there was nothing but sympathy for him, even from the wearers of the crimson. Griswold was not overtrained nor was he out of condition. He simply suffered an utter nervous breakdown. By the time the Yale launch reached Gale's Ferry, he was able to walk to the dressing-room.

The Yale oarsmen elected as captain, for next year, H. A. Howe, 1909, of Orange, N. J. Howe is twenty years of age, six feet one inch in height, and weighs 186 pounds. This was the second year that he has rowed in the varsity eight. He is one of the most powerful oarsmen that Yale has had in recent years. He rows at No. 6.

At the Yale quarters, Captain Ide said:

"Harvard defeated us, and they are entitled to the victory. My boys did all they could; they did nobly. I have no more to say."

Harvard elected as her captain for 1909, W. R. Severance, 1909, of New Bedford, Mass. Severance is twenty-one years of age, five feet eleven inches in height, and weighs 177 1/2 pounds. This is the second year that he has rowed in a Harvard varsity boat.

ELBERFELD MADE N. Y. MANAGER

Old Richmond Baseball Player Is Given Clark Griffith's Place.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 25.—Norman Elberfeld, of the New York baseball club of the American League, was today chosen manager of the team to succeed Clark Griffith, who resigned yesterday. Elberfeld was selected at a meeting of the club, at which President Farrell and Griffith were present.

President Farrell told the players that, if necessary, he would spend money to secure one or two good players to strengthen the team.

"Kid" Elberfeld, as he is better known in the baseball world, was a member of the Richmond team in the old Atlantic League during the season of 1907, and he has a host of friends in this city. He played at short and third, and his work there gave promise of what he has achieved today.

Elberfeld, now a special policeman in Norfolk, played center field on the same Richmond team with Elberfeld, and is, perhaps, the only man, excepting Jake Wells, in this part of the country belonging to that famous aggregation which won the pennant for Richmond.

At the end of the 1897 season Elberfeld was purchased as utility man by Clark Griffith, and has been with New York ever since. He is a native of Anisett, Tenn., and was playing back lot baseball when picked up by Jake Wells, then manager of the local team. Elberfeld returns to his home every year, and was married there about four years ago. When he stopped here this season, the American League made it a point to visit all his old friends.
